Description: New York Times Bestseller In a divided country desperate for unity, two sons of South Carolina show how different races, life experiences, and pathways can lead to a deep friendship—even in a state that was rocked to its core by the 2015 Charleston church shooting. Tim Scott, an African-American US senator, and Trey Gowdy, a white US congressman, won't...

Review: Amazing book written from each mans point of view about their friendship, their life before Congress and their action plan to make an impact on current issues that older and younger generations wrestle with in todays world. Each man is honest in a raw and powerful perspective that relates to any race or political affiliation. Easy to read and will...

It might have been great to have had Oliver and Chloe tell their parents that they liked one another when he was staying with them in America. I was not impressed with lots of foul language. Above all what I took away was: 1. Tom Ketchum is not Black Jack Ketchum but they look a bit alike and share a first and last name, so bounty hunters are satisfied that they'll collect on Black Jack by capturing Tom, even if he might not be the right Tom. Book given for an honest review and I honestly loved it. The books specific, justified criticism of the American education system is unflagging.
